TEACHING

I currently teach sessions on Anthropological Methods and Analysis at Oxford Brookes, and ultimately intend to introduce courses on the Ancient Near East and Arabian Archaeology. At Durham I taught 1st and 2nd year undergraduate courses on Ancient Civilizations of the Near East, and Comparative Civilization. I devised and taught a course on Arabian Archaeology at Reading, as well as a day school on the Indus Civilization. I am eligible to supervise research students, having completed the Supervising Research Students course at Oxford Brookes University.

CONFERENCE ORGANISATION

Seminar for Arabian Studies. I am Chair of this international conference, held annually at the British Museum, responsible for its organisation and the production of annual peer-reviewed proceedings. It covers the history, ethnography, epigraphy and archaeology of Arabia, and has a large international attendance.

The Ubaid Expansion? Cultural Meaning, Identity and Integration in the Lead-up to Urbanism. Durham, 20-22 April 2006. Conceived, fundraised for, and organised by myself, proceedings co-edited with Graham Philip (Durham).

Red Sea Conferences I, II & III

October 2004, 2006 and 2008. British Museum & Society for Arabian Studies. Fundraised for RSI. Organising committee for RSII and RSIII.

EXCAVATION (Director)

Julfar. Excavation at Julfar al-Nudud, Ras al-Khaimah, UAE. This major site was the only medieval port town in the lower Gulf. As director of OBAH I took a professional team to excavate in Spring 2010. A study season is now taking place, and publication will occur in 2012.

Historic Bahrain. Excavations at Bu Maher Fort and the Fakhro 'Amara, Bahrain. These properties are on a Pearling Heritage Trail in Muharraq, which has been submitted for UNESCO World Heritage Site status. Illustrated reports are being prepared for the client, with publication scheduled for 2011.

OBAH projects. Various other field projects and museum consultancy as Director of Oxford Brookes Archaeology and Heritage, ranging from rescue excavations to desktop archaeological assessments, survey, historical consultancy and training.

Kuwait-British Archaeological Expedition to Kuwait (1998-2006). A joint excavation with a team from the National Museum of Kuwait. It investigated settlement and maritime trade in the Neolithic (ca. 5000 BC). The results were published this year (see publications below).

The Iranian-British Archaeological Survey of Bushehr (2004-2005). Joint research project with a team from the Iranian Cultural Heritage and Tourism Organisation. Archaeological and geomorphological survey of the coastal region of Bushehr Province..

Qatar Archaeology Project (2000, Research Director). Archaeological investigation of an island with multi-period occupation at al-Khor, Qatar. The results were published this year as a downloadable e-book (see publications below).

PUBLICATIONS

Books

Forthcoming: Pearling in the Gulf: the History and Prehistory of a Formative Industry. Arabian Publishing. This single-authored volume explores the development of pearling as the dominant economic activity in the Gulf region, and its formative influence in the development of urbanism and coastal settlement, from 5000 BC to 1950 AD. It is a work of economic history, underpinned by archaeological, historical and statistical analyses, which will reshape our understanding of the development of the societies of the Gulf. The completed text is with the publisher (Arabian Publishing) and picture research is underway. Publication in 2011.

In prep: Historic Buildings in Bahrain. This volume will present the architecture, history and archaeology of Bu Maher Fort and the Fakhro 'Amara (a historic warehouse) in Muharra q Bahrain. They are properties on Bahrain's Pearling Heritage Trail, currently the subject of a submission for UNESCO World Heritage status, and were recorded and excavated by Oxford Brookes Archaeology and Heritage in 2009-2010.

2010: Maritime interactions in the Arabian Neolithic. Brill. Main author and co-editor (with Harriet Crawford). The book explores maritime interaction between Ubaid Mesopotamia and Neolithic Arabia during the 6th/5th millennia BC. It is based on the results of excavations in Kuwait, and includes extended discussion and analysis of early seafaring and interregional interaction, full specialist analyses, and a detailed account of boat-related finds.
